Ricard Ferrer presents his collection of worktop for Cosmic: Saku

Its plant-like shapes and colours are inspired by nature itself.

How would you define this collection?

Saku arises from a change in the perception of the bathroom environment, by awakening a sensitivity that leads us back to a more attractive look, closer to the user. A recess to purity, to nature, to the organic, with light and delicately shaped objects that also give the collection an aura of sophistication.

What inspired your design?

Shapes of plants, how they grow and evolve, hence the name for the collection, "saku" to flower in Japanese. The idea was to study it formally from an Eastern perspective; the study of nature and the role it plays in its culture and traditions, while still including a conceptual and constructive precision.

Who is the collection for?

It is not easy to identify a single profile for Saku. I think different sensitivities can be brought together and it might be surprising. Although it is a formally sophisticated collection, its wide range of colours can function very well in different environments.

Could you describe this collection using three adjectives?

Plant-like, pure, organic.

Cosmic commitment

Our Environmental Management

In COSMIC, conscious about the impact that the new technologies and the new processes are causing in our surroundings, we have developed an own system based on ecologic criteria that introduces daily habits in our installation management and in our daily works, helping in this way to preserve the natural resources.

Recycling and having a correct management of paper, carton, plastic, wood and electrical devices helps us to minimize waste contributing in this way with the sustainable development model.

In 2007 we recycled:

- 6.3 tons of paper
- 184 square metres of plastic
- 278 square metres of carton
